What you asked us for

Four requirements — and one sentence that reframed two of them.

“I want a neighbourhood where I can access a lot of people by walking. An area which is in movement, where the scenery is not decaying but fresh and new — like life which is always happening.”

— Nicole Johnson

Three ways of reading a neighbourhood

Every home read the same way, so no area is judged on a hunch.

PulseMap™

Is this area renewing?

Reads when every home and its neighbours were last built or renovated, and finds the pockets where renewal clusters.

StreetReach™

How much is within a walk?

Counts the homes within a five-minute walk of your door, so “central” becomes a number rather than an opinion.

TrueValue™

Is the price fair for

Compares a home's square foot with what neighbourhood norms not the county average

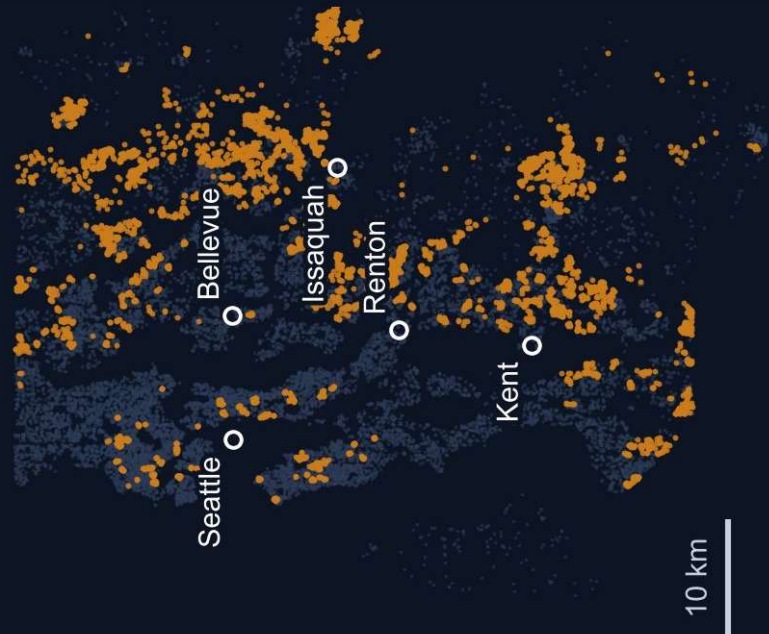

MatchScore™ folds all three into a single number from 1 to 10.

Every home you will see passed all four of your requirements before it was ever scored.

The county is not renewing evenly

PulseMap™ finds where homes are still being built and renovated.

4,844

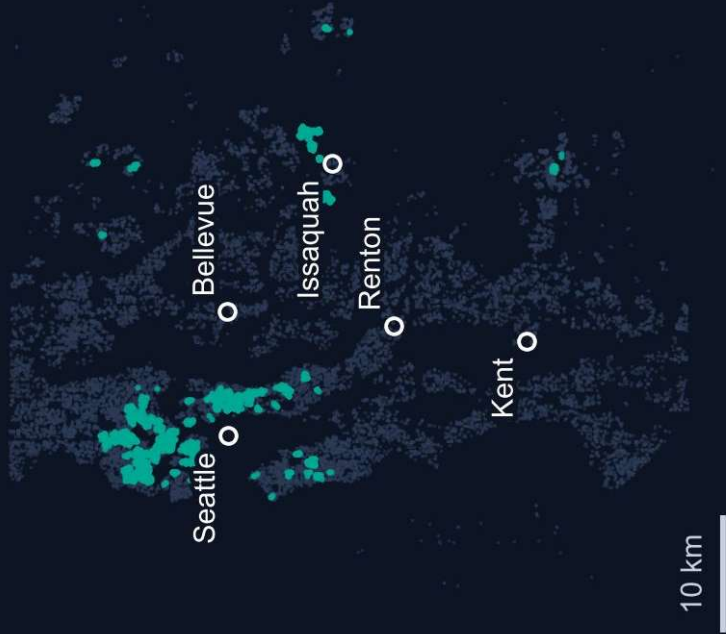

homes sit in a pocket that is genuinely renewing

These pockets are not a coincidence. Neighbouring homes renew more often than chance would allow — which is exactly what a neighbourhood “movement” looks like from above.

Central, measured in footsteps

StreetReach™ reads central the way you do: people reachable on foot.

1,601

homes have 15+ tightly packed neighbours within a 5-minute walk

Notice these are not only downtown. Several are well outside the city limits, which is why we never used distance from Seattle as a filter.

Then we rated every one of the 427

All 427 passed the same gates, so the score came from elsewhere.

Reading a MatchScore

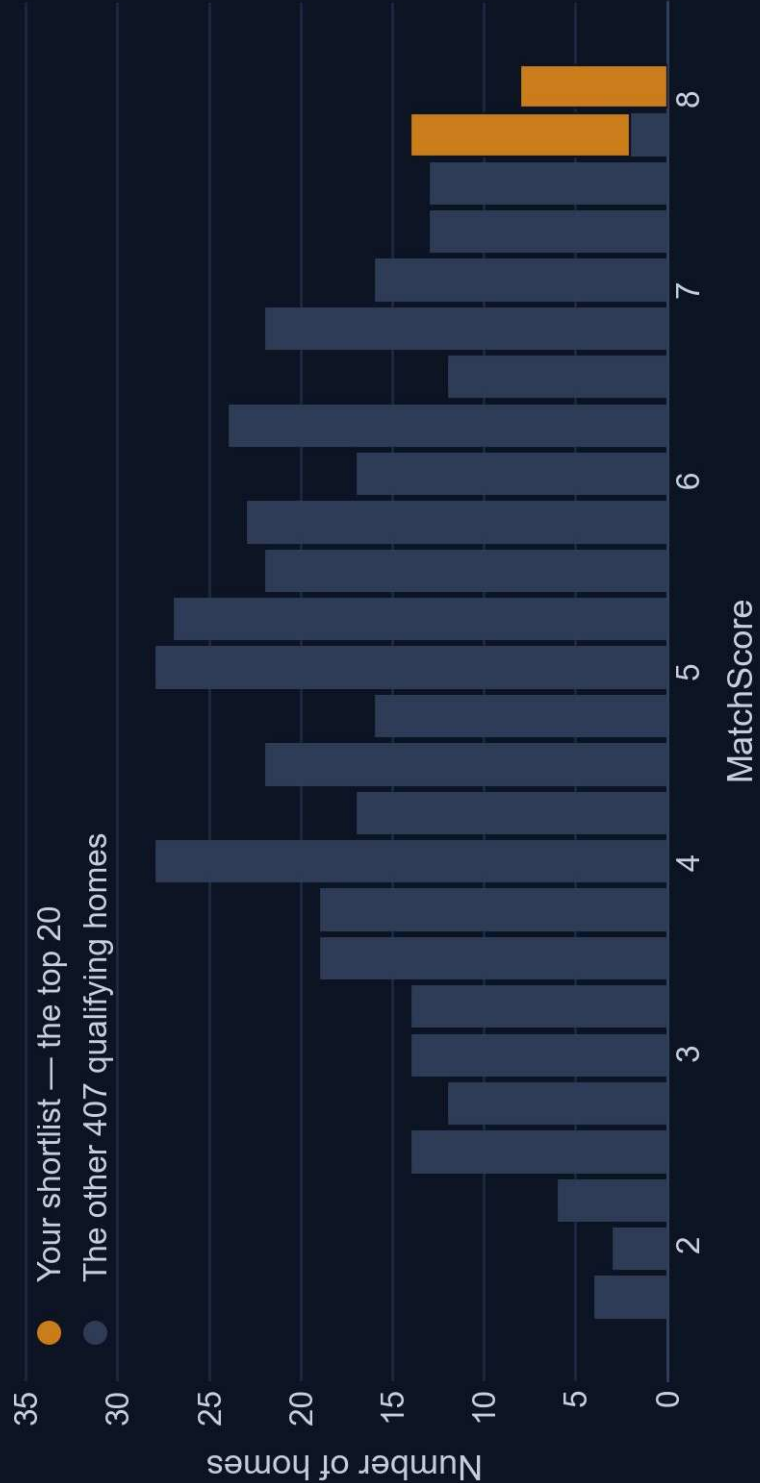

- 10 means the best of the not the best houses in the area
- Build quality most important for nearly every home in the area
- Distance to downtown is most important for each home but not the most important factor in the score.

Liveliness is deliberately absent from the score: measured as new building, it mostly tracks distance from the city.

What you trade, and what you get

Same shortlist, same price band — three genuinely different bargains.

● City Core

Closest in, smallest rooms, highest price.

● Parks & Water

The best price per square foot of the three.

● New Frontier

Most space and the room furthest out.
